Huawei scouts Europe for tech startups to secure supply chain

Huawei has rapidly shifted toward self-reliance as US sanctions hurt its global supply chain

BLOOMBERG
January 31

HUAWEI IS IN talks about investing in European tech startups and contributing to research in a bid to secure its supply chain as tensions with the US escalate, people familiar with the matter said.

In the final weeks of 2019, Huawei executives visited startups and venture capital firms in countries including Germany and France, they said. The companies discussed business collaborations and potential cash injections in exchange for equity stakes, the people said, asking not to be identified because the talks were private.

No final decisions have been made and Huawei may decide against making any investments, the people said. A spokesman for Huawei didn't immediately respond to a request for comment.

Huawei has rapidly shifted toward self-reliance as American sanctions jeopardised a carefully orchestrated global supply chain. US President Donald Trump has repeatedly railed against China and its companies, including Huawei, citing industrial espionage, national security and intellectual property theft. He has limited their access to the US market and to American suppliers, while also pressing allies from Japan to the Netherlands to review policies toward the Asian giant.

The company has been open about its desire to work closely with researchers in Europe. But any larger investment may face scrutiny. The UK this week revealed partial bans for Huawei equipment in high-speed 5G networks.

Under President Emmanuel Macron's watch, the French state has added AI and semiconductor to the list of sectors under the foreign investments regulation act. The law allows the state to review, block or demand government reviews in any investment in entities that are part of the list, which spans

Apple, Huawei chip supplier's fourth quarter net tumbles 95%

SOUTH KOREA'S SK Hynix, a chip supplier to Apple and Huawei, said on Friday its fourth-quarter operating profit slumped 95%, missing analysts' estimates, as chip prices were hit by oversupply and a demand slowdown.

SK Hynix, the world's No. 2 memory chip maker after Samsung Electronics, said its operating profit was 236 billion won in the December quarter, below a 433 billion won average forecast drawn from 19 analysts, according to Refinitiv data.

communications to space.

UK merger rules introduced in 2018 increased scrutiny of technology deals on national security grounds. Germany's economy ministry also said in November that it planned to tighten regulation covering the takeover of high-tech firms by non-EU companies.

Still, Huawei already has a collection of small investments in Europe. In 2014, the Chinese company made its first investment in the UK, buying a stake in semiconductor company XMOS, while in 2010 Belgian wireless technology firm Option sold semiconductor company M4S to Huawei for 8 million euros ($8.9 million).

The company's also said it will put 20 million pounds ($26 million) behind British app developers to encourage them to write software for its in-house smartphone platform, HarmonyOS. It's part of a $1.5 billion global developer program announced last year.

Huawei is also building up its European research and development arm after deciding in November to move its US research business to Canada.

Jeff Bezos gets $13 billion richer in about 15 minutes

BLOOMBERG
January 31

JEFF BEZOS JUST got a whole lot richer. Shares of his Amazon surged 12% to $2,100 in extended trading on Thursday in New York, after the largest US e-commerce company reported fourth-quarter results that smashed Wall Street estimates.

Bezos, already the world's richest person, added $13.2 billion to his fortune in about 15 minutes. At the current price, his net worth would be about $129.5 billion, according to the Bloomberg Billionaires Index.

Bezos, 56, owns about 12% of Amazon's outstanding stock, making up the bulk of his fortune. His ownership of closely held Blue Origin accounts for about $6.2 billion. The late surge Thursday added more than $90 billion to Amazon's market value, pushing it above $1 trillion.

His ex-wife, MacKenzie Bezos, 49, also has reason to celebrate, as she owns about 4% of the Seattle-based retailer. She started the day as the world's 24th-richest person, with a $37.1 billion fortune.

Bezos wasn't the only tech titan with dramatic changes to their net worth this week following company earnings. Elon Musk's fortune swelled by AMAZON WAS ON course to exceed $1 trillion in market value again after results beat expectations, with analysts applauding the popularity of the e-commerce giant's one-day shipping initiative and the performance of its cloud-computing business.

The shares surged 8.7% in US pre-market trading after reporting what Robert W Baird analysts called an "impressive quarter from top to bottom." Goldman Sachs analysts pointed out that it was the first time the company beat the upper end of its revenue guidance since the first quarter of 2018.

The results sparked a rush on Wall Street to raise price targets for the stock, with RBC Capital Markets analysts giving it a new Street-high target of $2,700, implying 44% upside from Thursday's close. —BLOOMBERG

Visa and Mastercard could be the next trillion dollar firms

LEWIS KRAUSKOPF
New York, January 31

TECH AND INTERNET titans were the first to reach $1 trillion in stock market value, but the next US companies that could do so are better known for their plastic.

Soaring stock prices are propelling credit and debit card companies Visa Inc and Mastercard Inc up the market value charts, where they currently rank 7th and 11th among companies in the benchmark S&P 500 index. The stock prices of both Visa and Mastercard have gained roughly 50% in the past year.

While the stocks may not keep up that torrid pace, Visa and Mastercard would each be worth over $1 trillion by 2023 if their average annual gains of the past three years were to continue, surging past the likes of Facebook and Berkshire Hathaway, if they also maintain their recent pace.

Fueling their rise is a shift toward cashless financial transactions spurred by a rise in online shopping.

"Everything travels on their rails," said Sandy Villere, portfolio manager of the Villere Balanced Fund, which holds Visa shares. "They literally sit in the middle of the banks, consumers and merchants and that has been a really enviable place to be."

Visa had a market value of $449 billion and Mastercard's stood at about $324 billion as of Thursday's close. The $1 trillion club currently includes Apple, Microsoft and Google-parent Alphabet.

Amazon stood at $927 billion, though the e-commerce leader's shares jumped on the heels of its earnings report on Thursday after the bell, putting it in position to crack $1 trillion, as it did briefly in September 2018.

Revenue for both Visa and Mastercard nearly doubled over their past five fiscal years, to nearly $23 billion for Visa, and about $17 billion for Mastercard, according to Refinitiv data. Adjusted earnings per share more than doubled for both companies over that period.

Visa reported quarterly revenue late on Thursday that slightly missed analyst estimates, a day after Mastercard beat quarterly profit estimates.

About 43% of consumer purchases around the world excluding China are made using a digital form of payment, up from 28% in 2010, according to Lisa Ellis, senior analyst at MoffettNathanson.

"Globally, we still have five to 10 years, at least, to go of penetration," Ellis said.

Visa holds a 60% share of the credit and debit card market, followed by Mastercard with 30%, according to Ellis, with American Express far behind at 8.5%.

Despite their importance in finance, Visa and Mastercard are categorized as part of the S&P 500's information technology sector. While Apple, Microsoft and chip companies such as Intel often garner the lion's share of attention, Visa and Mastercard have been key contributors to the rally in technology shares.

Their valuations have expanded to their most expensive in at least a decade. Visa trades at about 31 times forward 12 months' earnings estimates, while Mastercard trades at 35 times, according to Refinitiv Datastream. Both stocks are trading at a higher premium to the market than they have on average over the past five years.

The big run for Visa and Mastercard shares has also come during a more than 10-year US bull market, and gains could be more muted in any downturn. Stocks started 2020 strong but have pulled back amid concerns over the spread of a virus from China.

Risks to the companies, Ellis said, include greater competition in the payment sector from big tech companies, as well as tougher regulations from governments around the world that might hinder access.

The companies are not sitting still. Earlier this month, Visa agreed to buy privately held Plaid in a $5.3 billion deal to boost access to financial technology, and in August Mastercard agreed to buy a majority of the corporate services businesses of Scandinavian payments group Nets for about $3.19 billion. —REUTERS

Fukushima water should be released into sea or evaporated, panel says

BLOOMBERG
January 31

A JAPANESE PANEL will recommend to the government that swelling volumes of treated radioactive water from the wrecked Fukushima nuclear plant should be released into the ocean or evaporated.

A Ministry of Economy, Trade and Industry panel agreed to the options during a meeting Friday in Tokyo and will send the recommendations in a report to Prime Minister Shinzo Abe's government, which will make the final decision on how to proceed. The draft report made public at the meeting Friday didn't include a proposed timing for the release.

"The options we are proposing are realistic and feasible," Ichiro Yamamoto, the panel's chairman, told reporters after wrapping up their three-year discussion of the issue.

"It's up to the government which option to take." Storage tanks at the site, which hold water treated by a nuclide-removal facility called ALPS, are forecast to be full by mid-2022.

Trump acquittal near with Senate likely to deny witnesses

BLOOMBERG
Washington, January 31

THE MOST CONSEQUENTIAL day in Donald Trump's impeachment trial begins in the Senate on Friday, with Republican leaders likely to muster enough votes to block witnesses and rapidly move to acquit the president.

The decision late Thursday by Senator Lamar Alexander of Tennessee, a Republican who had been considered a potential supporter of testimony, to vote against new evidence largely dashed Democrats hopes of prevailing.

His announcement is a victory for Trump's legal team

The final vote would clear Trump in time for his delivery of the State of the Union address and, especially, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, who had been steering the trial to a quick conclusion after two weeks of debate and questioning.

"We took another big step towards the president's acquittal in the Senate today, and look forward to completing this impeachment process as soon as possible," chief White House congressional liaison Eric Ueland said late Thursday.

The Senate starts Friday with House prosecutors and Trump's defence each delivering two hours of closing arguments. Then senators vote on calling witnesses. If the Senate rejects that option, the chamber would move toward a vote on final judgment on the two impeachment articles against Trump. There's little chance that two-thirds of the Republican-controlled chamber would vote to convict and oust the president.

The final vote would clear

Trump in time for his delivery of the State of the Union address, which he'll deliver next Tuesday from the same House chamber where Democrats adopted the impeachment articles six weeks ago. It also gives him a chance to claim vindication and a rallying point for supporters just as the 2020 election campaign fully gets under way with the Iowa caucuses on Monday.

Democrats would need four Republican votes to get a majority to call witnesses in the trial. But only Utah's Mitt Romney and Maine's Susan Collins have backed hearing from witnesses, including former Trump National Security Advisor John Bolton.

'Rapid weather swings linked to global warming may increase flu risk'

PRESS TRUST OF INDIA
New York, Jan 31

RAPID WEATHER VARIABILITY due to global warming may increase the risk of a flu epidemic in highly populated regions of the world in the late 21st century, according to a study which may lead to better models for predicting influenza outbreaks.

While low temperatures, and humidity in the winter have been identified in earlier research as favourable conditions for flu virus transmission, the current study, published in the journal Environmental Research Letters, noted that the 2017-2018 flu season was one of warmest on record, and yet one of the deadliest.

In the current study, researchers, including those from Center for Ocean-Atmospheric Prediction Studies (COAPS) in the US, assessed historical data on influenza outbreaks to see how significant weather swings in the autumn months affected the flu season in highly populated regions of countries like the US, China, Italy, and France.
